

Jack Evans studies history at the University of Oregon. His research interests include Native American history, the history of religion in the American West, and peace studies. Jack's master's thesis explores the role of gender in the Indian Student Placement Program, which removed indigenous children from their families in order to educate and assimilate them in the homes of non-Indian Latter-day Saints.